Little Venice

Little Venice is a picturesque area in west London where Regent's Canal meets the Grand Union Canal. Dating back to the early 1800s, the waterways were once an important transport route for goods entering the city. At the canal junction stood a waterside venue called The Paddington Stop (now The Waterway), a popular place where boatmen could rest and travellers could pause along the busy route.

Today the area is known for its tranquil waterways, colourful houseboats, and elegant white stucco terraces that line the canals. The name "Little Venice" is often linked to the poet Robert Browning, who lived nearby, though some attribute the comparison to Venice to Lord Byron. What was once a working canal hub has since become one of London's most charming and peaceful waterside neighbourhoods.

Shopping

Portobello Market

Portobello Road Market in Notting Hill is one of London's most famous street markets, known for its vibrant atmosphere and colourful houses. Best visited on Saturdays, it's renowned for antiques, vintage fashion, street food, and unique collectibles, attracting visitors from around the world to browse its lively stalls.
